Only a good power strip can supply power-hungry AV components with the voltage they need. The Powersocket 907 with its 2.1 mm² oxygen-free copper inner conductors is one such strip. Of its eight available sockets, four are equipped with digital filters that eliminate the „dirt“ from the lines, which can significantly impair the reproduction quality of digital AV components. In addition, the sockets can also be switched in two groups, thereby avoiding the unnecessary power consumption of some devices in standby mode while other devices are in use. A practical aspect is provided by the phase designation of individual sockets and the LED display, which prevent the user from having to waste time checking the devices are connected correctly in phase. The power strip naturally also provides protection against overvoltage. Furthermore, mobile devices can also be charged directly from the strip via USB connectivity. The high-quality, brushed aluminium design duly rounds off the premium technical configuration.

CONCLUSION:

This power strip offers everything you need for connecting your home cinema and hi-fi equipment. It is also compelling in terms of practicality and safety.
